THREE MONEY MINDSET SHIFTS YOU NEED TO MAKE IN ORDER TO GROW YOUR WEALTH

MONEY TIPS

By Audrey Faust, MBA; Financial Coach & CFO

Often when it comes to growing our wealth, we tend to think of skills that we will need to learn in order to accomplish that goal, but our mindset is just as crucial.

2. People with money are selfish

Question: How many times have you dreamed of owning your dream car or home but then judged someone as selfish for having theirs? But here's the thing — If you perceive those people in a negative way, you're going to perceive yourself in a negative light if you have money. And that's going to prevent you from keeping it and from growing it.

3. I can't afford to invest right now

Whether it's investing in ourselves, the stock market or property, taking the leap into investing can feel daunting especially if we think that we can't afford it yet. The hard truth is that you will never be able to afford it if you don't make investing a necessity in your life. I come across a lot of women who tell me that they don't have the money to save or invest but often that's not quite true. It's just that they haven't shifted their mindset to believe that investing is crucial to their long-term success and wealth building plan.

1. Not all debt is bad

There is a narrative out in the financial coaching world that all debt is bad! I don't agree with this for two reasons — one a lot of us have debt and the idea that all debt is bad can actually trap us in a shame cycle that makes us feel bad for past money decisions. When we get trapped in this cycle, we then find it harder to get out of it.

I've actually leveraged my debt to create wealth, so I believe that some debt is actually beneficial when you're starting off on your journey to wealth building especially if you're paying less than seven percent interest on it.
